Examples of high-level languages are Python, Java, C++, etc. High level programs can include software applications for desktop, mobile, web, etc. Machine language program: Machine language is the lowest level of programming language, consisting of binary or hexadecimal instructions that directly control a computer's central processing unit (CPU). This type of programming is more challenging for humans to read and write because its instructions require detailed knowledge of a specific hardware architecture. Web server: A web server is a server that serves web pages to users upon request. It's an application or machine made capable of processing HTTP (HyperText Transfer Protocol) and/or HTTPS requests to deliver the page content. While the web server can host web pages developed with HTML, HTML itself isn't used to create web servers. Web servers are created and managed using various software like Apache, Nginx, etc. or specific programming languages like Python, JavaScript (Node.js).
