This ship has a big fanbase with millions of fan art. It's the most popular ship for both Test Tube and Fan. It became popular ever since Let 'Er R.I.P. What really sparked the ship was the two's "nerdy" personalities; Test Tube being the science fanatic, while Fan has a lot of knowledge on a lot of topics (specifically Inanimate Insanity) and always seeking to know more. They both raised Baby Shimmer in the second season and are currently the caretakers of Bot and N/A. Despite it being very popular, Fantube has the following rivals: Fanbulb, Testbulb, Fanbrush, Testbrush and Knifan. On AO3, Fantube has 299+ works. Brian Koch said that Bot refers to Fan and Test Tube as their parents at the BFDI X II Experience.[citation needed] In "Spring On The Breakfast," Bot does refer to Fan and Test Tube as their parents in a scene. When a fan asked if Fan, Test Tube, and Bot were a family, both Adam and Brian confirmed yes. Fan and Test Tube both share the same pose on the thumbnails of their Exit interviews, and share each others color on their background in the Invitational intro. Test Tube: I trust you. We got this! " —Hatching the Plan Test Tube and Fan never had much interaction until "Let 'Er R.I.P.". This is when they discover that they have a lot in common, like being awkward and social outcasts. Ever since then, the two have become close friends, and are almost never seen without the other. Episodes suggesting a friendship[] In "A Kick In The Right Direction", Fan passes the ball to Test Tube after blocking it during the soccer match. In "Let 'Er R.I.P.", Test Tube tells Fan about the waning crescent, and Fan expresses how it's big, but looks small at an angle, just like him on the show. The two are attacked by MePhone5S and MePhone5C (which Test Tube initially expresses a fascination for), but Fan tricks them into jumping off the 60 Foot Cliff, promptly causing their death as the duo look on, unfazed. Test Tube gladly accepts, proclaiming that saying staying away from people is her speciality, and adding that Fan can count on her. Later, Test Tube is excitedly talking about how nice it was for Fan to trust Test Tube with the egg. Test Tube is seen near the end of the contest trying her best to protect the egg while she's burning. Fan asks if she's okay after the challenge. However she successfully threw the ball and the Bright Lights won. In "Alternate Reality Show", Fan was extremely concerned when he found out Test Tube was missing. Later, he and Test Tube were sitting on top of the vending machine talking about Test Tube's time-traveling adventure. Fan is upset they can't use it again because it could be used to create thematic parallels, but is good-natured about it and jokingly asks if Test Tube is from an alternate timeline. In "Hatching the Plan", Test Tube appears to be the contestant affected the most by Fan's abduction. After getting betrayed by most of the former Grand Slams, Test Tube later apologizes for getting upset at him in "Mine Your Own Business" and hopes that things going forward would be different. In "Stranded in Paradise", after Fan's monologue after crashing onto Paradise, Test Tube gives him a bravo before breaking her arm. Fan chuckles at this and says it was fair enough. Later in the episode, Fan is extremely upset over Test Tube's deletion and has a hard time accepting it. He reminisces on their friendship, gently stroking his thumb over Test Tube's image on his phone's wallpaper. When Paintbrush tells Fan she might be gone permanently, he reacts strongly. Before Fan's own deletion, he says "see you, Test Tube."
