Tesco has become the first major supermarket to ban plastic baby wipes in a pledge to help the environment. The supermarket, which was also the first retailer to ban both plastic bags and microplastics, vows it will no longer buy, sell or produce wet-wipes made from plastic. The decision responds to calls to ban the plastic wipes and it is hoped other retailers to follow suit. Go here for the very latest parenting updates from across the North East

A Tesco spokeswoman told The Times : "There is no need for wet wipes to contain plastic so from now on we will no longer stock them if they do." The supermarket chain is the UK's largest supplier of the products and sells of 75 million packs of wet wipes a year. A Generic Photo of a packet of wet wipes (Image: Shared Content Unit) This works out as more than 200,000 a day. Whilst convenient for parents, the products have become a target for environmental campaigners - as have disposable nappies. Many wipes use plastic fibres which makes unable to break down and unrecyclable. Tesco will continue to stock plastic-free wipes and those made by eco-friendly brands including Waterwipes and Rascal + Friends. The chain said its it will aim to make lavatory wipes plastic-free from next month and own-brand of pet wipes plastic-free by the end of 2022.

Campaigners have long called on supermarkets to cut the amount of goods wrapped in plastic. Friends of the Earth said the wipes contributed to "the tide of plastic waste that pours into our environment every year, threatening wildlife and blighting our neighbourhoods". Its pledge follows a similar curbs on wipes by health store Holland and Barrett. The health retailer announced a complete ban on the sale of all wet wipe products from its 800 UK and Ireland stores And all wet wipe products and variants were replaced by environmentally friendly and sustainable alternatives by end of September 2019. Millions of wet-wipes are sold in the UK every year, with uses spanning make-up removal and hand sanitisers to surface cleaners. But EarthWatch Institute and Plastic Oceans UK claims, 9.3million wipes are still flushed down toilets every day in the UK This damages marine life and creates huge costs for people from sewer blockages. Jo Ruxton, founder of Plastic Oceans Foundation, said at the time: "Single-use plastic items represent a major part of this problem and this destruction will soon be irreversible if the world doesn't make a change." Waitrose and Sainsbury's insisted their own wipes were 100% plastic-free. Nappy makers Huggies said it hoped to be plastic-free by 2025. Gwilym Owen, 28, was allegedly filmed at a Tesco Extra store in Bangor, Wales, pulling off plastic which prevented shoppers buying items including clothing under coronavirus rules

Watch - Man tares covers off 'non-essential' items in supermarket

A 28-year-old man has been charged with criminal damage and contravention of coronavirus regulations after allegedly being filmed removing plastic from items in a Tesco store. Gwilym Owen, 28, will appear before magistrates on November 24 following the incident in the Bangor Tesco Extra store on Friday.

North Wales Police said Owen, from Anglesey, has been further charged with several public order offences. Video posted to social media from Friday showed a person at a Tesco store in Bangor pulling plastic sheeting from shelves. The Welsh Government has introduced a firebreak lockdown with guidance published by the Welsh Government saying certain sections of supermarkets must be "cordoned off or emptied, and closed to the public"

These include areas selling electrical goods, telephones, clothes, toys and games, garden products and dedicated sections for homewares. The irate shopper was filmed pulling away plastic sheeting

Owen allegedly posted the video of himself on his Facebook account, reports North Wales Live. A man is heard saying "since when has clothes been exempt!?", "rip the fers off!" and "kids! fing clothes, it is a disgrace." As staff attempt to challenge the man and to stop him, he swore at them. He can be heard saying: "Since when have clothes been non-essential?" He has now been charged

He and the person filming were then confronted by security staff before the video ended. Putting the video on Facebook, Owen said: "I don't care about the backlash that I may get from this. We're heading into winter now and who would have thought clothes for children weren't essential?" He added: "I'm sure there are people out there who can barely afford heating in their houses and now they want to stop people buying clothes in supermarkets. "I don't expect everyone to do what I've done here but I do expect everyone to know that denying the public clothing is nothing but immoral and inhuman." The post said the public should "wake up and have a backbone" amidst the ongoing coronavirus restrictions. "Things will only get worse if we don't make any effort in stopping this madness." The post continued: "I'm not prepared to live in a society where they can take basic human needs away like being able to buy new clothes, especially for children." A spokesperson for Tesco said: "Under new restrictions set out by the Welsh Government, we are currently unable to sell 'non-essential' items in our stores. "Our colleagues have worked hard to put these measures in place and we ask that customers please respect these restrictions." 1 of 1
